Asia Indigenous Peoples Pact
At the heart of Indigenous Peoples’ struggle is the recovery of their right to self-determination because it underpins the enjoyment of all other rights in our context. The capture of our lands and take over of our right to self-government by outsiders has caused immense destruction and tragedy and have destabilized our societies.

We are colonized peoples. It makes little difference whether we were forced to live in countries created and ruled by the descendants of settler colonialists from overseas, or like in Asia, in countries created after the colonizers had left and that are now ruled by the elites of the dominant in society. What all Indigenous Peoples have in common is the experience of discrimination, dispossession, and disempowerment that follows colonization.
Many of our communities have been forcefully relocated, our lands have been taken away, forests have been destroyed, mountains mined, valleys dammed and flooded. Children are forced into schools where none of our languages are spoken, none of our knowledge and values are taught. And we are all forced to live under governments that are not our own, in which we can hardly participate, and on which we have no influence.

The loss of self-government in our communities accelerates social disintegration, alienates us from our roots, it robs us of our capacity to collectively identify and address our problems and needs, to envision a better future and find the path that can lead us there.
In the international arena, the adoption of ILO Convention 169 was the beginning of recognizing the unique history and situation of Indigenous Peoples focusing on our security and cultural integrity. Further, by adopting the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (UNDRIP), states recognized Indigenous Peoples’ unique characteristics and distinct worldviews, and our right to self-determination. However, our unique characteristics and systems of governance, which sprang from intimate association with our lands, are not yet part of the architecture of the states in Asia.

Recognizing the right to self-determination entails democratization and strengthening of democracy in Asia. This could provide an opportunity for the State to revisit its institutional architecture for accommodating and protecting our autonomy and right to self-determination that is based on self-governance of Indigenous Peoples.
Not only are Indigenous Peoples struggling and reclaiming their right to self-determination, but several Indigenous Peoples are currently involved in peace negotiations for different forms of self-determination or for the implementation of negotiated agreements on autonomy. It is in this context that Asia Indigenous Peoples Pact (AIPP) is launching its first Regional Course on Indigenous Peoples’ Self-government and Democracy from 27 October 2021 to 14 November 2021, to engage in reflective conversation and build the capacity of indigenous leaders, scholars and organizations in Asia.
OBJECTIVES

General objective: To prepare a pool of indigenous leaders who are schooled in the knowledge and practice of indigenous governance systems, such that the nucleus for a regional movement for indigenous sovereignty, self-determination and democratization can be consolidated and advanced in Asia.

Specific objectives:

To catalyze and build capacities of indigenous leaders and scholars on Indigenous Peoples’ epistemology, values, and governance systems through the conduct of the course on IP’s Self-government and Democracy at the regional and country level.

To build regional and country level movements on self-determination and self-government across Indigenous Peoples and communities in Malaysia, Nepal, India, and Bangladesh and initiate a coalition of civil society platform for self-determination and democratization.

To form a pool of indigenous leaders and scholars from the course participants to reinforce indigenous leadership and bolster the capacity building and mobilization on self-determination and democracy at the local and country level.
PARTICIPANTS

The regional team of Indigenous experts, researchers, resource persons who have been engaged in this field for decades will facilitate the sessions during the regional training course.

The target of the course is for the 14 countries of AIPP, and this pilot phase will cover Malaysia, Nepal, India and Bangladesh (2021).

Participation in the event will be open to the public and will include speakers from grassroots organisations, government representatives, international organisations, and many more. If you are interested in participating, please contact us through:
